Every year, MIT undergraduate and graduate students complete their degrees and enter the workforce. Whether that means current students mapping out their next moves, recent graduates launching careers, or alumni navigating a mid-career job change, MIT alumni can offer valuable and insightful guidance. And the MIT Alumni Advisors Hub makes it easier to do so than ever before.

WHAT is the MIT Alumni Advisors Hub?

The Advisor Hub is an online platform that allows students and alumni seeking tangible, actionable career advice to tap into a network of experts from a variety of fields—made up of many of the 137,000+ MIT alumni worldwide. Advice seekers can receive guidance in the form of a career conversation or an informational interview, or more specific help like a resume critique or a mock interview. Advice seekers can select individuals to speak with based on searching the alumni profiles.

HOW does it work?

Each alumni advice giver signs up to be a resource on the MIT Alumni Advisors Hub and easily sets up a profile using their MIT Infinite Connection account; by syncing with LinkedIn, alumni can quickly display their professional experience. Advice seekers—students and alumni—log in via their Infinite Connection account, select their individual preferences, and begin to browse advisors by field of interest, company, geographic location, or keyword search. After selecting an advisor, the system will suggest a time to connect. Since both parties can input their availability, the system shows times that are available and will assist in the introduction, send reminders before the conversation, and provide a dedicated conference line to host the call at the agreed upon time. Because it all happens virtually, it can be done from anywhere with a smartphone or computer.

WHO can use it?

The MIT Alumni Advisors Hub is available for MIT alumni and students. Institute staff working directly with students can request access on a case-by-case basis by emailing alumniadvisorshub@mit.edu.
